Brief Description

In recent years, there has been increasing flow of capital toward more sustainable business models throughout the world — a trend with interesting implications for corporate sustainability executives, chief financial officers and investor relations teams alike. A fundamental shift has been the growing recognition by investors that sustainability issues can be a risk to company profitability, as well as an opportunity to discover firms with better business models that outperform the market.

In this seminar, our speaker will examine how the trend of sustainable investing would affect the capability of your company to compete for funding to achieve growth and change:

- Improving Access to Capital by Investing in Sustainability
- Case Study – Impact of Sustainability on Business Valuation
- Creating a Sustainable Culture for Sustainability
