Cyberport is a public body committed to driving new impetus into Hong Kong's economy through digital technology and is justifiably placed under heavy scrutiny from its stakeholders, which include start-ups, the technology sector, the business community, and the general public. In light of this, the Board plays a critical role in making conscientious decisions to ensure public resources are used effectively in achieving our public mission to nurture entrepreneurial talent, foster the development of the innovation and technology industry, and facilitate the integration of new and traditional economies.

Cyberport's ecosystem has seen immense growth in recent years and is home to over 1,400 start-ups and technology enterprises, as well as the largest FinTech community in Hong Kong. The Board continues to be committed to upholding high standards of corporate governance and will work tirelessly with its professional management team to further promote and enhance Hong Kong's position in potential technology application clusters such as smart living and digital entertainment and esports.
